MISCELLANEOUS INFORMATION.

APPENDIX III.—1891.

BOTANICAL DEPARTMENTS, AT HOME AND ABROAD.

In previous numbers of the Kew Bulletin (May 1889 and August 1890) there have been published lists of the staffs of the Royal Gardens, Kew, and of Botanical Departments and Establishments at home, and in India, and the Colonies, in correspondence with Kew. These lists have proved of considerable value in affording a convenient means for placing on record the official titles and designations of the officers concerned, and in giving from time to time notification of the changes that have taken place in the several appointments. In the present list an enumeration is given of the officers that have been selected to carry out the recently organised botanical survey of India, with the districts allotted to each one. A fuller list is also given of officers in charge of gardens in Native States. The organisation of the Botanical Department of the Leeward Islands brings into one group the several botanical stations existing in those islands.

BULLETIN

MISCELLANEOUS INFORMATION.

APPENDIX IV.—1891.

INDEX, KEW BULLETIN, 1887–91.

The first number of the Kew Bulletin was published in January 1887. At first it was proposed to issue it only occasionally whenever matter of sufficient interest for publication had accumulated. It was, however, at once found necessary to publish it monthly, and in deference to the suggestion of subscribers further space has since been obtained by relegating to appendices information of a purely formal kind. So far sixty numbers have been issued with six appendices.

The subjects treated have related almost entirely to economic botany. The results of investigations made by members of the staff at Kew and of kindred institutions at home and abroad on vegetable products and the plants producing them, have been carefully summarised and presented in as concise and clear a manner as possible. In many cases the articles have been illustrated by plates from original drawings or by those placed at the disposal of the Director by the Bentham Trustees from the Icones Plantarum. The kind of information furnished by the Bulletin has evidently proved of great general interest. It has become an expeditious mode of communicating this information to persons at home, to the numerous correspondents officially connected with Colonial and Indian botanical establishments, and to private persons interested in plant products in distant parts of the Empire. It has also been of service to members of the general public engaged in planting or agricultural business in India and the Colonies.

An index to the five yearly volumes already published, has been prepared for convenience of reference to their contents. This is intended to be bound at the end of the volume for 1891.
